2026 Conference on Mental Health

*Partnering Through Community:
Advancing A Culture of Collaboration*

Exhibit at Tennessee's Premier
Mental Health Conference.

The Partners In Treatment: Nashville 1st Annual Conference on Mental Health, originally launched in Scottsdale, has grown quickly that we are now thrilled to expand to the East Coast with our inaugural event in Nashville. This conference is the brainchild of seven partner facilities—Anew Treatment Center Scottsdale, Lindner Center of Hope, Meadows Behavioral Healthcare, Embark Behavioral Health, and Integrative Life Center, Cumberland Heights, and Onsite. Our objective is to bring a superior educational and networking experience for industry professionals seeking the latest information on the treatment of mental illnesses. We have brought together some of the most knowledgeable clinicians in the industry who will be presenting on timely topics with useful information designed to support our attendees' desire to learn the latest in mental health treatment advances.

We are thrilled to offer exhibitor and sponsorship opportunities for organizations to showcase their latest services and resources in the mental health field. We also recognize the importance of building industry relationships, which is why the conference will provide ample networking opportunities for attendees to connect, collaborate, and exchange ideas with peers, experts, and exhibitors alike.

What Attendees Are Saying

Just got back from the Partners in Treatment Conference in Arizona and I'm reminded (again) how special this space is when the right people are in the room. So many high-quality operators, clinicians, and founders doing the work the right way. It was meaningful to connect with new faces and spend time with people I've known for years. The kind of conversations that pick up right where you left off. There's something different about being in a room with people who genuinely care about the work, the clients, and building programs with integrity.

Director of Clinical Outreach

One of my favorite conferences of the year. Every single time. There's something about being in a room full of individuals who are genuinely locked in. People from all over Arizona, people who flew in from out of state, all there because they care about helping the next individual. That's not a small thing. This field can get heavy. You know it if you're in it. But conferences like this remind me why so many of us chose it, or why it chose us. Great conversations. Great people. The kind of energy that follows you home. Already looking forward to next year.

Spent last week in Arizona for Partners In Treatment and it was one of those trips that brings back what actually matters and puts things into perspective. Thank you to Aaron Johnson for putting together something that felt thoughtful and grounded in real connection...Getting to spend time inside different programs, hear how teams are thinking about care, meet the individuals in their care and have the chance to understand how they support people day to day is so valuable.

Attending my first Partners in Treatment event was eye-opening. It was a great reminder of how valuable genuine conversations, shared perspectives, and strong community connections can be. There was a real sense of enlightenment in seeing how collaboration, education, and simple conversations can create such meaningful impact within our communities. I'm grateful for the opportunity to continue building these relationships, strengthening partnerships, and working alongside others who are passionate about making a difference.

Being at the Partners In Treatment Conference hits different. Looking around the room, you see people from all over the country who chose this work. People who care deeply about helping others find their way out of some really hard places. There's a shared understanding here that you can't explain. The conversations feel real. The connections feel meaningful. I'm grateful to be part of a community like this. One that shows up, supports each other, and keeps pushing to do better.

Associate Director of Business Development

What an event...150 vendors. Hundreds and hundreds of colleagues and counterparts-all in one place. This is how you build something bigger than yourself— a stronger network, a stronger community, and ultimately a greater impact on the people who need it most. Grateful for the opportunity to show up, represent, and be in rooms like this where real alignment happens.
